Detroit is a city that has been hit by economic disaster. Many community organizations are working to restore Detroit to a city that people want to inhabit, but much help is needed. The city lacks population and financial resources and many residents have given up hope.

Camp Restore is a LCMS organization that began working in New Orleans to relieve and rehabilitate that city in the wake of Hurricane Katrina. Two years ago, seeing the economic devastation in Detroit, Camp Restore started working also in that city. They began forming community partnerships and networks and identifying work that needed to be done to restore Detroit's communities. They are asking for friends from across the country to work alongside them and their community partners to help return Detroit to a thriving city.

Our work may include tasks like rehabilitating houses, developing and monitoring a community park, running a VBS, visiting with residents, etc.
